This workshop is recommended for therapists that are working with families and children. You will be introduced to Play-Family Therapy, an approach to integrating play therapy with family work using a child-centered play therapy model. Participants can expect to gain a basic understanding of the language of play and the value of metaphor as a healing modality in working with families. This introductory workshop includes role play and several clinical examples, including the case of a 5½-year-old boy whose mother died. He witnessed his mother's medical seizure when he was 3 years old. Participants will discover how Play-Family Therapy helped this child to heal from the trauma.

Instructors: Tonia Betancourt, LCSW, RPT-S and Alyson Nowell, LCSW have twenty-two years of combined experience working with families and children. They have trained for many years at the Family & Play Therapy Center, and they have worked in a variety of settings, including schools, residential placements, sexual abuse treatment programs, and mental health clinics. They are both in private practice.
