Dissociation occurs on a continuum from normal levels, such as day dreaming, to fragmentation of identity or self into separate streams of consciousness. Our seminar will focus on a range of dissociative experiences in children, aged 3 to 12, that result from early developmental childhood trauma such as physical, emotional, or sexual abuse, neglect, witnessing violence, and attachment disturbances. Two case studies will highlight the often overlooked dissociation in medical trauma. Dissociation occurs in traumatized clients much more frequently than therapists realize. We will briefly highlight research findings and also historical facts that have kept this body of information dormant. The seminar will address additional skills that are needed by therapists to begin to identify, understand, and create a solid theoretical framework for addressing complex trauma. Attendance includes a copy of the Dissociation Symptom & Behavior Engagement List that Dottie Higgins-Klein developed, which is particularly geared toward identifying mid-range dissociation.

Dissociative identity disorder (DID) is defined in the DSM-5 as an identity disruption indicated by the presence of two or more distinct personality states (experienced as possession in some cultures), with discontinuity in sense of self and agency, and with variations in affect, behavior, consciousness, memory, perception, cognition, or sensory-motor functioning. The Wikipedia article on dissociation describes it as any of a wide array of experiences from mild detachment from immediate surroundings to more severe detachment from physical and emotional experience.

The various self-states develop out of intolerance for the trauma. For example, one ego state may carry the experience of intolerable circumstances. Another may carry a scared baby that matches the age of the trauma. There may be a trickster who lies or steals. One self-state may hold the aggression or rage and, yet another, a competent and seemingly well-adjusted child. “The child may view him- or herself as having a different age, gender, and viewpoint from the presenting child-client. These states can present in therapy as distinct changes in affect, speech patterns, demeanor, and body language, and each state may respond differently to the therapist.” (Waters p. 6) While the segmentation is a helpful coping mechanism for the traumatized child, it also causes a myriad of unsettling challenges for the child and for his family members.

Clients who are diagnosed with ADHD, PTSD, RAD, OCD, oppositional defiance disorder, affect dysregulation, or bipolar disorder may also be experiencing unhealthy dissociation, including memory loss. The child may not play in typical healing ways with an experienced child/play therapist. The therapist may feel that the child is not making adequate progress even when in a safe home environment. Educating parents is a challenging part of the treatment.

This seminar will be rooted in a mindfulness-based Play-Family Therapy modality and will include various approaches to healing complex trauma. Laurie Parker presents a case study of a preteen who had severe preverbal and early childhood medical trauma. The impact of early medical trauma can manifest with emotional dysregulation, communication disorders, somatic irregularities, disturbance in circadian rhythms, and behavioral patterns fluctuating between numbing shutdown and explosive anger. Ms. Parker will illuminate principles in assessment, treatment, and integration in the treatment of dissociative disorder. Understanding a differential diagnosis between categories such as ADHD, Conduct Disorders, and Dissociative Disorders is essential for effective outcomes. The Joan Lovett story telling method for EMDR in a family setting will be reviewed, as well as stabilization techniques.

Dottie Higgins Klein will present the essential introductory theory of dissociation using an extensive power point and concrete examples from play therapy and sandtray therapy. The sand trays offer a concrete example of essential intervention. Attendees will receive a copy of this Power Point that includes over 100 slides and serves as a Manual for Dissociation 101 Theory. These presentations will demonstrate how treatment was guided by theories from Mindfulness-Based Play-Family Therapy as taught by Dottie Higgins Klein, STAR Model of Frances Waters, and the fields of both Somatic and EMDR therapy. We highly recommend attention to this introductory training, since it will be followed in the Academic Year 2018-2019 by a series of monthly Friday and Saturday Seminars at FPT Center.
